Huntersville School

For the first few years after the American Civil War, the old Academy building which had been built in 1841 was used as a school. A new two story school building was constructed about 1880.
This early monument to education still stands in Huntersville.

Some of the teachers who taught at Huntersville School were:

Vesta Sharp (Seville)
Clara Palmer Wade (Seville)
Elizabeth Wallace
Alberta Shields
Ruby Carpenter
Eva B. McCarty
Wilma Carr
Robert W. Jackson

Others who worked at the Huntersville School were:

William Pierson
Nell McLaughlin Barrett
Georgene Alderman
Shirley McCoy
Eileen Irvine

(This is not a complete list - you may know of others who taught or worked at the Huntersville School.)

When the Huntersville School was closed in 1968 it was the closing of an era. It was the last of the one and two room schools in use in Pocahontas County.

The last two years of the school's history Robert Jackson taught Geography, Science, and Math to the Fifth Grade in the morning and to the Sixth Grade in the afternoon.
Wilma Carr taught Reading, English, and Spelling to the Sixth Grade in the morning and to the Fifth Grade in the afternoon. In previous years First, Second, and Third Grades were taught downstairs while Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Grades were taught upstairs.

Mr. Jackson tell us that some of his students were bussed from Marlinton. His classroom was upstairs while Wilma Carr taught downstairs.

Lump-in-the-Throat Story

This retired schoolteacher learned years later how much of an impact she had on one of her students.

Rev. J. Gary Martin, Ohio

PLEASANT SURPRISE: A very long after two last year in a local school the teacher discovered a little affection had done a long way.

MY HAND trembled as I held the letter from Bobby Lin. I brushed a wisp of graying hair from my forehead, and instant memories flooded back as I closed my eyes.

Bobby's letter brought back vivid memories of my first year as a fourth-grade teacher at the Old Main Street School. I remembered how the attention that young students like me needed was often met by teachers who were overworked and overburdened. As a result, many of the children turned toward the double doors of the school building, which were the color of the old building's freshly milled floors, the source of distraction and the entry avenue of new, disruptive pupils. As I thought back to those days,

I spluttered the eyes and lips widened, remembering now the denim-shirted boys with twenty dollars' pocket cash, coming against the punkette-carved desk top. Suddenly, once more I was addressing my fourth-grade class. There I stood, sitting at school in his seat, glaring defiantly at the teacher, looking back at a boy in the back of the class.

Even today, I cringe when I think of my strong lecture speech to that class on the first day of school. "I want you children to know that I have a very important message for you. I want you to know that I have a very important message for you. I want you to know that I have a very important message for you."

As much as I would have (and I want to thank my Missal teachers for this), I was not different. On the other side of the coin, there are students that teachers are not particularly fond of either. That was, Boonyi Landed in that bin. To be brutally honest, I marked him 1 mark/100 for some reasons with an "E" with each.

With my busy work schedule, I had neglected to notify Buddy's school records. And that's why, when the City of Boston came to the school to interview me, with gaily wrapped presents, I was surprised when Bubby walked up to my desk and shyly handed me a gift.

The package was rolled in brown wrapping paper and fastened with Scotch tape. When I opened it, a rhinestoned bracelet with most of the stones missing and a partially filled bottle of perfume fell on my desk. I was deeply touched.

The children began to giggle, but when I snarped on the bracelet and dabbed some of the perfume behind each of my ears, they stopped their outburst. It was if they were reminded of the true spirit of Christmas, and they told Holly they thought it was a nice gift.

Bobby fringed after the others, and just before he left, he said sadly, "Gee, Mrs. Marple, you know, you smell like a rose garden."

I stayed late that night, long after the students and other teachers left the city. I walked out Elsie's school records

The nobility were heartrending — first grade. Bobby is bright, he's capable of learning, but seems to be muddled.

Second grade: Bobby's mother is terminally ill, her illness devastates him.

Third grade: Bobby's mother dies.

Fourth grade: Bobby's father is indifferent to him. He finds it surprising that his father is indifferent to him. He finds it surprising that his father is indifferent to him. He finds it surprising that his father is indifferent to him.

When I finished reading, my cheeks were wet with tears. There was a little boy who desperately needed me, and I didn't need to think twice about being there for him. For the short time we had left together, I gave him the special attention and affection he badly needed.

Several friends of Dudley's whom he met on his travels. Dudley was born in 1863, and in 1885 he received a short-term appointment to the U.S. Army. Dudley was in the Philippines when he met the young woman who was to become his wife. Dudley was in the Philippines when he met the young woman who was to become his wife. Dudley was in the Philippines when he met the young woman who was to become his wife.

Q. S. I am getting married in the fall of this year. How can you get all the family I have (that died last year) and you have me at the wedding by sitting in the pew and you have me at the wedding? Love, Mandy.

① The first thing I notice when I step outside is a warm blanket of silence. The air is crisp, a perfect 68°F, and the sun is just starting to peek over the horizon, casting a soft, golden glow. It's a beautiful surprise, especially after the humidity of the city. I take a deep breath, savoring the fresh scent of the morning. The world feels like a new canvas, and I'm ready to paint my day.
